MOSS, Harry

1820	- November	Farndon, SRY	fought and lost to - Thompson	The match between Harry Moss, the Gipsy, and Thompson, the Berkshire man, both acknowledged good men, under twelve stone, which was to have taken place at Hedgeley, within a few miles of Dorking, took place in a paddock belonging to a Mr. Mills, at Farndon, ten miles from the appointed spot, the boxers having been drawn thither by an extra subscription purse of 20/. in addition to the 40/. they fought for. Moss was seconded by one of the Gipsy tribe, and Thompson, by Nares, a navigator. Money was sported freely at 5 to 4 upon the Gipsy. In the first round Thompson had his cork drawn in a brisk rally, in return for which he was floored by a chance body hit, and both got up eager to meet again, without the assistance of seconds. 2. In their eagerness for assault each missed intended hits, and they closed and had a wrestling match, when Thompson had Moss's head safely under the left arm, in a manner in which Randall would have given him a sufficient dose, but the Gipsy slipping out of his adversary's clutches without harm, and they broke from each other. By this time exertion had tamed them, und they worked more deliberately. A severe round was fought, and it was difficult to say which had best. It was nothing less than give and take, severe hitting, and both fell weak. The round lasted seventeen minutes. 3. Both felt their eyes, which were damaged, as if to recruit their sight by removing the lids. At it they went again in bull-dog fashion; hitting was the order of the round, and Thompson cast out a front tooth. A severe rally ended the round by the Gipsy being knocked down with a nasty blow on the left side, above the hip-bone, and the flesh followed the fist, and left a sore protuberance, about the size of a cricket-ball ; and this blow settled the battle, which had now lasted 22 minutes. The Gipsy came to the scratch, doubled up, seven other rounds, bin he was heavy on the legs, and the use of his left side was at a stand-still, and he was [...] blind at last, although Thompson received a flush right-handed hit in the seventh round which sent him to sleep a little. In the eleventh round nature had turned Moss up, and he was dead to time, and lost the fight in 37 minutes. It was a ruffianing fight, and if fought over again the Gipsy would have a right to win it.	The British Press, 23 November 1820, 3
1820	27 December	Ham Heath, near Haslemere, BKM	fought and beat Bill Edwards	The battle between Moss, the gipsy, and Bill Edwards, the Bath butcher, took place on Wednesday, for 50gs. on Ham Heath, four miles from Haslemere, Bucks. Both had milled their way into notice[.] Edwards was considered an elegant, rather than a powerful boxer : the gipsy, on the contrary, had proved himself a ruffian, who would not be denied. A ring of 18 feet was the space for combat, and the men entered it very sweet upon themselves. Richards, the cricketer, seconded Edwards, and one of the gipsy tribe seconded Moss. - Even betting. In the first round Edwards uncorked his adversary's claret, which flaw about copiously, and Moss in boring in was floored by a right-handed teazer in the body, which settled first blood and the knock down. 2. The men got more steady at their work, and a very gallant round was fought, after exchanging counter hits at the head. In rallying much ruffianism took place on the part of the gipsy, who displayed much of the Randall tactics. Edwards at length stopped his adversary's actions, by getting his head under the left arm, and weaving at it until he paid him, trick and tie, at the bleeding game. The gipsy got away, and both broke their ground for a fresh turn loose. The gipsy placed a heavy hit on Edwards's right side, which he did not seem to relish, and bored him down, but both were weak from the exertions of the round, which was all fight for seven minutes. 3. Moss was blind of the right eye and the lance was applied, but it was a hugging round, and both fell. 4. Edwards fought with much gaity [sic] and science to get at his opponent's left eye, but he would not have it. Edwards had the best of in and out fighting, and dropped Moss forward by a neat hit in the wind. 5. Moss led in this round and knocked his adversary down by a heavy hit upon the jaw, and it won him the fight, for Edwards being thus crossed in leading, like many of his superiors, did not fancy it, and he was very shy at going in after. He was thrown a cross-buttock, and it was even betting that he would not come again. 6. This round ended the fight, in nineteen minutes. Moss was the worst beaten, but Edwards evidently wanted courage, or he could not have lost it. Moss won the battle by a slight blow with which his adversary went down, and would not appear in time.	The British Press, 30 December 1820, 3
