1868	25 April	Marcham, BRK	charged with encamping		The Oxford Times , 2 May 1868, 3
1868	27 April	Abingdon, BRK	in magistrates court	Three gypsies named Josiah Smith, Job Smith, and Henry Bath were brought up in custody charged with being found in a lane in the parish of Marcham, without visible means of subsistence. The prisoners formed a portion of an encampment of gypsies who had squatted in the lane in question, and in consequence of many complaints having been made to the police by parties in the neighbourhood of damage to fences and trees, which rightly or wrongly, but most probably the former, had been laid to these marauders. A constable took the three men named into custody on the previous Saturday night amidst a clamour of tongues, profaneness, and lamentations on the part of the women and children, one of the prisoners being found asleep at the time in a tent, the other two sitting over the remains of what appeared to be a considerable camp fire. They pleaded guilty, but protested they had never been at the place before, and one of them created a laugh by expressing a wish that they could get somewhere where the police were not, or else that they would not interfere with them. The Bench committed them for seven days each. There were a large number of bronzed faces in the Court with anxiety expressed on their countenances, and at the close of the case, as the men were being handcuffed for removal they gave vent to their sympathies, after their manner, rather strongly, one woman shouting out "They are going to starve you for a week, but you shall have beef enough when you come out."	The Oxford Times , 2 May 1868, 3
