1877	28 July	Oxford, OXF	in magistrates court	Henry Izzard , hawker, of Cowley, was charged with stealing a quantity of vetches, value 2s., the property of Charles Dickinson, then growing upon land belonging to the Rev. Geo. Moore, at Cowley, on the 19th last. - George Henwood deposed that he bought the vetches for Mr. Dickinson. John Jennings said he was working at Cowley on Thursday, the 19th inst., between six o'clock in the morning and breakfast time. He saw defendant first go up in the field, and shortly afterwards a man in the employ of Mr. Dickinson came to fetch some vetches away. After the man had gone away, defendant came with his own cart, and fetched two or three pitches of vetches; he brought them by where he was working. He knew the vetches did not belong to him, but he thought he had leave as he went for them, when the men were all at work ; he had seen him go and fetch vetches twice before. - Defendant said he had three chairs in his cart, and had picked up a few tares on the road. - The witness Jennings, re-called, said there were no vetches in the cart when defendant went into the field, but when he came back there was. - Sentenced to seven days' hard labour.		The Abingdon and Reading Herald , 4 August 1877, 3
