An interesting gipsy wedding took place at King's Lynn this week. The bride's name was Sylvester Thorpe, and the bridegroom John Harris. The best man was a gipsy named Prince, and his wife was "bridesmaid." All four arrived at the church in the same cab. The bride wore a gorgeous dress of maroon plush, surmounted by an immense hat covered with waving feathers. Her "bridesmaid" was attired in a costume of golden plush. The bridegroom and the best man were attired in velvet, with vermilion neckties. On leaving the church, a piano-organ hired for the occasion, played dance music [sic], and the party enjoyed a lively waltz in the street. Revels and feastings were kept up for two days by a party of fifty gipsies, who, it is stated, presented the bride with a pint pot containing a substantial sum of money. The young married couple are spending their honeymoon in a caravan which was specially built at a cost of £150.	FreeREG + The Bury Free Press, 20 August 1898, 7
